BEST PRACTICES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENGLISH

Best practices are perceived to have specific characteristics.

1)Identification of best practices

2)Sustainability of best practices

3)Dissemination of best practices

4)Adaptation of best practices

Identification of best practices in simple terms, the practices which add commendable value to an institution and its various stakeholders are the best practices. However, they depend on many variables. These should be kept in mind while identifying the practices. What might be considered as 'best practices' are limited in a number of ways? Firstly, what we consider to be the 'best' educational practice depends on our own limited knowledge, perspectives, contexts, interests and values. The interests and values on which the practices are premised may be contested by others. In that case, many of the assumptions on which the practices are premised will not hold. Secondly, 'best practices' are contingent, context dependent and defy generic description. Thus, if these practices are to be useful at all, we need to identify the ones that can be so restated as to be clearly seen to contribute to value addition to the institution or the stakeholders. Only then can they become context-free and less subjective. This requires a predominantly 'fitness for purpose' judgment and one cannot write an ideal typification of 'best practices' applicable to all contexts. The input factors, the process factors and output factors should be taken into account in identifying the criteria of best practices.

Sustainability of best practices the characteristics of best practices that contribute to success and sustainability may be identified. Some characteristics inherent in the practice which are worth mentioning include: (a) relative advantages over the preceding practice, (b) compatibility to institutional context and culture, (c) divisibility or availability in small parts as related to the whole; d) freedom from complexity which should be less for the adoption of the practice; e) communicability which is essential for the acceptance of the practice. There are also institutional factors that are extrinsic to the practice but have a great impact on the sustainability of the practice and they include: a) the culture of the institution that either supports or rejects new practices, b) commitment to the practice evinced by the members of the institution, c) institutionalisation or otherwise of the practice and d) the team spirit and ability to work in small groups and also shoulder individual responsibilities to contribute to the effectiveness of the practice. Whether the best practice under consideration remains to be so depends on the interaction of these factors. In particular, institutionalisation and internalization are keys to sustainability. Institutionalization refers to the process of making the best practices an integral part of the institutional working. Institutionalization of best practices is possible when there is an internalization of these practices among all the members of the institutional community. The best practices should become a part of the working culture of everyone in the institution. Critical reflection and the spirit of innovation should be encouraged

Elements of best practices or descriptors for the best practices can always be borrowed and improved upon further, with some amount of creativity and spirit of innovation. In adapting or borrowing best practices from other systems, we should remember that they can be ideal models of good practice - ideal, systematic, representations of patterns amongst variables. They may be simplifications of the complicated realities. When a system adopts a particular practice, several barriers may be encountered. Successful adaptation of best practices depends on both individual characteristics and the institutional context.

With the motivation of the IQAC the Best Practice of the college was framed.
